

HIS ELECTION VOW ENDS MARCH 4

E. F. Bockwell.

Maybe you've heard of those pre-election vows never to do so-and-so until such-a-one is elected, and also you've noticed that after election most of these fellows crawl faster than a person can slide away from a New Year's resolution.

But E. F. Bockwell of Kansas isn't that kind of a guy. When he says something he means it, by heck! And that's all there's to it. For instance—when Billy Bryan was running for the presidency in 1896 Bockwell said he'd never have his hair cut until he saw a Democrat elected president. As it happens, Bockwell had to keep away from the barber's shears 17 years, and his raven locks now hang half way down his back.

A woman might be proud of 'em, but Bockwell isn't a woman, and he will be all-fired glad when he gets a haircut.
